BIOGRAPHIES

Alanna Imes, viola, is currently a student at Salisbury University in the second-degree nursing program. She graduated from the University of Maryland College Park with a Bachelor of Music in viola performance in 2021. Her past and current teachers include Katherine Murdock and Dr. Sachiho Murasugi. Past experiences include chamber music under the guidance of Dr. James Stern, pedagogy with Rebecca Henry, and masterclasses with Roberto Diaz and Roman Kosarev. She has performed with the University of Maryland Symphony Orchestra under conductors David Neely and José-Luis Novo, and she is currently principal violist of the Salisbury Symphony.

Dr. William M. Folger, professor of music and director of choral activities at Salisbury University since 2003, is a conductor, pianist and vocal coach. In addition to teaching conducting courses and The History of Broadway Musicals, Folger conducts the University and Salisbury Chorales, Chamber Choir, and is musical director for the musicals, opera, and Musical Theatre and Opera Ensemble productions. Folger performs as a solo and collaborative pianist for faculty and student recitals, instrumental ensembles, and he is the associate carillonneur for Salisbury University.
